Ethicist Ingrid Robeyns argues in her work that taxes on the very wealthy should be increased so that governments will be enabled to solve problems of collective action, such as mitigating climate change. Robeyns cites the work of economist Mariana shows that government subsidies are a more effective engine of innovation than private sector investments; in addition, government-funded innovations tend to lead to further developments in disparate fields (such as the United States mission to land a person on the Moon, which accelerated developments in nutrition as well as navigation). Which choice best describes the overall structure of the text?

- A. It offers a claim by a scholar, then uses the results of a project by another scholar to show why that claim should be rejected.
- B. It summarizes the research of one scholar, then presents a study by another scholar that was inspired by the findings of that research.
- C. It details the findings of a research project by one scholar, then puts forward the suggestions of another scholar for further investigation.
- D. It introduces a proposition by a scholar, then describes that scholar's use of findings by another scholar to support that proposition.

The following text is from Angeline Boulley' s 2021 novel Firekeeper's Daughter. The narrator is an Ojibwe teenager who runs in the morning before going to school. Levi is her younger brother. My brother complains about my lengthy warm-up routine whenever he runs with me. I keep telling Levi that my longer, bigger, and therefore vastly superior muscles require more intensive preparation for peak performance. The real reason, which he would think is dorky, is that I recite the correct anatomical name for each muscle as I stretch. ©2021 by Angeline Boulley What is the main topic of the text?

- A. The narrator's warm-up routine before running
- B. A high school teacher whose class the narrator enjoys
- C. The career that the narrator's brother hopes to pursue someday
- D. The narrator's feelings about moving to a new town
